Imagine a small child who becomes afraid. He will suck in his breathe, his shoulders lift and tense, and his neck shortens. The eyes bug out in alarm. This posture prepares him to flee or fight as necessary.

If the child doesn't have the comfort to allow his system to relax, the tension can persist in the muscles and inform body posture. The emotion and experience of fear and alarm may become frozen in the system. The young developing body reinforces and sustains the experience of fear and distrust. Over time this will affect the child's personality and perceptions of the world around. He may grow up thinking there is danger when no threat is present. His life is limited from within by the old experiences held in the system.

Core Evolution is a body-oriented psychotherapy that heals old images, blocks & disturbing life patterns, freeing up life energy and our joy.
